2015 marks the 86th year of The Dawes Arboretum, founded in 1929 by Beman and Bertie Dawes. The 250-acre country farm that our founders purchased has grown to nearly 2,000 acres, enhancing their vision to create a site where they could collect and plant trees for research and education.

2015 has been a busy and productive year, and we truly appreciate and thank you for your patience with any disruptions you may have encountered while visiting the grounds during this busy time. We are excited to report on many projects underway, as well as to share some of the accomplishments in our collections, and in our education and conservation efforts.

Perhaps most visible and notable in 2015 was the completion of the two-year Japanese Garden reconstruction. The reconstruct and reopening coincided with the 50th anniversary of the Garden. Improvements included new trail surfaces, a new Meditation House, and rebuilding of bridges throughout the Garden area.

The Japanese Garden now includes an upland forest and understory plantings that will slow the velocity of water and sediment entering the pond. We were honored to have the assistance of the Garden’s original Landscape Architect, Makoto Nakamura, during a visit to consult on the project.

Also during 2015, Auto Tour reconstruction was completed in the north end of The Arboretum to improve access to the Daweswood House Museum and the collection areas north of the house. Repaving has created a smoother surface, and extensive swale and culvert work will help facilitate drainage.

Prairie and forest restoration was expanded in 2015, as nearly seven acres were reforested in mixed native Ohio trees, and more than three acres were planted into the native prairie. Research also began to evaluate the effectiveness and success of a variety of control measures commonly used to fight invasive plants.

We also have enhanced access to The Arboretum’s east side through the tunnel under State Route 13, located just south of the Cypress Swamp. The east trails traverse natural terrain and wind through one of the largest woodlands on the grounds. An exciting new development is a spur trail that takes you near an American Indian burial mound. The reclamation of this area has been largely volunteer-led. We look forward to providing interpretation and a history of those who lived and walked these grounds long before us.
Collaborative efforts with the Ohio Department of Transportation and AEP – based on our knowledge in habitat restoration and management – led to consultations on the development of prairie and meadow seed mixes, as these partner organizations begin converting many acres of mowed grass along some of Ohio’s roadways and electric transmission lines. We are pleased to be a community partner in this process.

Additional Highlights
The History Center continues to spotlight memorabilia from The Arboretum and the Dawes family. This year, we displayed the Civil War battlefield frock that General Rufus Dawes was wearing when he was injured during the battle of Gettysburg. Also displayed were some of his hand-written notes from Gettysburg. And, continuing our history of tree dedications, recently-retired Speaker of the Ohio House William Batchelder was selected as the 108th commemorative tree dedication.

2015 also has been a very successful year for our education efforts. The Heritage Middle School program continued to offer environmentally-focused, hands-on learning to 6th - 8th graders who waded in streams to sample water, learned to use lab equipment while studying geology, and explored the wildlife around them through observation opportunities. Our popular Fairchild Challenge program attracted more than 1,100 students from ten schools. Students participated in visual arts representations of plant and insect interactions, wrote essays, and created original, environmentally-themed educational public service announcements.

Looking Ahead
In 2016 we will continue on our path to improving accessibility for Arboretum visitors. Work on the southern portion of the Auto Tour will resume in late summer, and will improve visitor access into and through the south end collection areas.

Additional work will begin on the Parkwoods Trail, an accessible walking trail that will connect the Visitors Center with the Daweswood House Museum and grounds.

Late in 2016 or early in 2017, we will create another accessible trail from the Visitors Center to the Zand Education Center and Learning Garden. Improvements will continue to The Arboretum’s east side trails, as well as to the Red Barn natural areas north of Davis Road.

As a privately-funded organization, it is only with your support that The Dawes Arboretum has continued to offer these and other opportunities for learning, nature exploration, and recreation in our community. It is with your continued partnership that we look forward to many more accomplishments in the coming year, as we continue our founders’ dedication to increasing the love and knowledge of trees, history, and nature.

Thank you for sharing in this mission.

Trees ☼ History ☼ Nature

Since its inception, The Dawes Arboretum has collected and displayed a variety of tree and shrub species and cultivars. With many species and varieties to compare throughout the year, Arboretum staff can make more accurate suggestions to homeowners regarding the selection and use of plants in their landscapes.

Today, our Arboretum Plant Records track more than 17,000 living plants representing nearly 7,000 taxa. And, during the past fiscal year, 261 collection trees and shrubs were planted. In addition, more than 400 plants were removed, mostly due to the effects of the past two winters which produced a deadly combination of cold, wind, and sun. Living plant collection records are online at http://dawesarb.arboretumexplorer.org.

IrisBG, a plant records software program, allows easy mapping of plants anywhere on our property. We now can place plants in sites better matching necessary growing conditions – not simply where we can and cannot map. For example, this fall’s planting schedule included wild collected bald-cypress in the Black Duck Wetland, located well north of traditional collection sites. IrisBG also allows us to map and track plants in our native woodlands.

A relatively new garden, Rhodie Slope, is located just south of the Holly Hill parking lot inside the dense natural woodland. Initially used as an area of last resort for poorly-performing evergreen rhododendrons, it is becoming a beautiful garden in its own right.

We are actively thinning the tree canopy around this garden to allow more light penetration, both for rhododendrons and the addition of other species in the future.

In a relatively new approach, we are adding collection plants whose names have been listed in our inventory for years – some since 1924. These newer additions are plants whose seeds were collected from the wild, as opposed to those having a garden origin.

The total number of wild origin accessions to date is 2,289.

Acquiring native plants from natural habitats, as opposed to a nursery or other garden, reduces the possibility of hybridization and increases genetic diversity – subsequently increasing a species’ chances of healthy survival over time.

Beyond the plants themselves, the value of collecting seeds from the wild is documentation of their origin. Along with documenting origin is documenting the plant itself. Dried and pressed vouchers of leaves, flowers, and fruits are kept preserved. This past year, 77 vouchers were collected, and 419 previously-mounted herbarium vouchers were labeled and filed in permanent storage.

Along with the many contacts that make available seeds collected in the wild, Arboretum Nursery Manager Richard Larson also makes seed collecting trips. Coupled with many other exciting acquisitions from these sources has been native azaleas from nine southern states as far south as Florida, and as far west as Oklahoma. Included azalea species are Rhododendron alabamense, prinophyllum, prunifolium, arborescens, austinum, bakeri, calendulaceum, canescens, eastmani, minus, vasyi, and viscosum. New beds of native azaleas have been installed along the new accessible trail, with more to come.

It is exciting to observe variation within the same species collected from different localities; subtle differences in summer shades of green and not-so-subtle varieties of brilliant fall colors; same species nearly side-by-side with leaf emergence, and flowering times nearly two weeks apart; growth habits from tall and skinny to short and dense. Not as obvious, but noticeable over time, are observations such as hardiness, and insect and disease resistance.

The Arboretum’s extensive plant collection has taught us that the more individuals of a particular wild accession, the greater the genetic diversity and conservation value of a collection – especially of threatened or endangered species. For many, the word ‘threatened’ refers only to things in the wild; however, a threat also can describe agricultural crops such as European hazelnut (filbert), Corylus avellana. Eastern Filbert Blight (Anisogramma anomala) has made culturing European hazelnut nearly impossible in the eastern United States.

We are assisting Rutgers University in testing selections for EFB resistance, and to date, we are the only public garden displaying these resistant hybrids.

The Arboretum cultivates many collaborations that help test plants and, in turn, assist other institutions in their research. In the realm of woody plants we presently collaborate with:

- Rutgers University, NJ, in trialing EFB-resistant filberts. A past collaboration with Rutgers is our national genetic collection of dawn-redwood, recognized by NAPCC. Along with genetic individuals, we collect and conserve named selections. Three dawn-redwood cultivars added to the nursery this past year are ‘Little Lace,’ ‘Nitschke Cream,’ and ‘Swamp Thang,’ bringing the total number of cultivars to 27.

- The United States Department of Agriculture, Delaware, Ohio, Emerald Ash Borer & beech bark disease research. Grafted trees from ash “lingerers” in northwest Ohio and lower Michigan will be arriving in the next year. These will be planted orchard-style, tested for EAB resistance, and if determined to be so, will become a seed orchard.

- The American Chestnut Foundation, Ohio University, Athens, and Ohio Department of Natural Resources, with disease resistant American chestnut research.

- Texas A&M University with Earth-Kind® Rose trials.

- National Arboretum, Washington DC. Along with several other gardens, we are conserving genetics of native Fothergilla major & F. gardenia collected in NC, SC, and TN, as well as testing some National Arboretum selections.
From the beginning, it was clear that they had a lot in common...

J. Marjorie “Marge” Jones and The Dawes Arboretum both were born in 1929 in Jacksontown, Ohio. The two grew up together. Marge was the youngest child of Harry Jones, who began working for the Dawes family on their farm in 1919. When The Dawes Arboretum was officially founded in 1929, Harry stayed on as superintendent, until his retirement in 1955.

Marge spent her childhood at The Arboretum in a home built for her family — still known as the “Jones House,” it now is used as office space. Marge loved time with her dogs, collies known as Tippy and Tippy II. She also enjoyed friendships with the Dawes’ grandchildren.

In 2013, Dorothy Mann, granddaughter of Beman and Bertie Dawes, told The Arboretum Historian about an exclusive club that the children had formed. Meetings occurred in the smokehouse, near what is now the Daweswood House Museum, and the club President was acknowledged with a prestigious seat — a potty chair the children had rummaged from the house. Marge was a club member, and today we can imagine how much fun it must have been growing up at The Arboretum with smokehouses, springhouses, log cabins, and stately forests just right for a world of childhood imagination.

Filled with ambition, Marge found her first job at The Arboretum. According to her niece, Barbara Hupp, she brought Bertie Dawes her newspaper every day for the sum of 50 cents a week. In high school, Marge played the drums, according to niece Kay Cox, and was serious about her craft — protective of her instruments, and not allowing anyone else to touch them.

By the time Marge left for college at Wittenburg University, her drive for success was clear and after graduation she moved to New York City to pursue a career in publishing.

Hupp remembers, “She said laughingly, ‘I thought The New York Times was just waiting for me to arrive.’ ”

Although Marge joked, she enjoyed a long and impressive career with G.P. Putnam, Prentice Hall, Holiday House, and finally, as the Editorial Director for the Junior Library Guild from 1970 until her retirement in 1994. Guild colleague Susan Marston wrote this about Marge, “I remember Marge gleefully telling me about changing our categories (which, when she arrived in 1970, included A, B, and C — with ‘B’ books for boys and ‘C’ books for girls) to age levels rather than gender designations (‘A’ was already for younger readers, without a mention of gender.)”

While she spent the majority of her life in New York City, she returned to her roots in 2011, when she moved back to Licking County and resided at Chapel Grove until her death, in July 2015. Upon her passing, Marge left a generous estate gift to The Dawes Arboretum. Marge was influenced by her father, who had a strong dedication to The Arboretum.

In 1953, Dalton H. Mulloney, assistant to Beman Dawes, wrote of Harry Jones, “He has performed his duties as superintendent with untiring devotion and constant concern for the best interests of the Arboretum.”

We can only assume that some of Marge’s spirit and drive in life came from her experiences at The Arboretum—learning a strong work ethic and benefiting from a wealth of history and nature that, literally, lived in her backyard.

The Arboretum is honored by Marge’s gift and sincerely thanks the Jones family for helping to make The Dawes Arboretum what it is today.

A memorial tree labeled for Harry Jones, a Quercus imbricaria, shingle oak, is on Oak Hill. A recently labeled memorial tree for Marge Jones, a Carpinus tschonoskii, Yeddo hornbeam, is in sight of the front door of the Jones House. This site also is the final resting place for Marge’s cremated ashes.

We greatly appreciate Tribute Donations, received to honor the following people during fiscal year 2014-15. Our condolences to the families and friends of those who have passed—donations help ensure the Arboretum is available for future generations to experience and enjoy.

Volunteer Program Thrives

Leslie Bline, Community Engagement Coordinator

Volunteering at The Dawes Arboretum allows you to spend time in a beautiful setting, work alongside professionals, learn about the natural world around you, and socialize with people who share similar interests. There are a tremendous number of opportunities to get involved! For information on volunteering, contact Leslie Bline at labline@dawesarb.org.

Since I began as The Dawes Arboretum’s Community Engagement Coordinator in August, I have been fortunate to meet many Arboretum volunteers, and learn about the program as a whole. During this time, I have enjoyed several conversations, brainstorming sessions, and planning meetings to figure out ways to make our already-impressive volunteer program even better — for the benefit of both The Arboretum and our volunteers.

In the last fiscal year, 162 volunteers donated nearly 4,500 hours to The Arboretum. During that time, the program also gained 63 new volunteers. In addition, we welcomed two new Trustees, and two local businesses that have helped with special events and projects. Volunteers have spearheaded large projects, assisted with educational programming, helped with mailings, and actively participated in various other activities.

It has become quite evident just how vital a role the volunteers play in the success of The Arboretum — they have a hand in every aspect of our mission. It is clear that the strength of our volunteer program allows us to do what we do for the community.

Sharing Knowledge
Docents are relied upon to lead tours through the Daweswood House Museum during its months of operation. These volunteers are equipped with knowledge of the Dawes family, the Pure Oil Company, and Arboretum history, and contribute greatly to the history aspect of our mission.

And, much like our docents, the Central Grounds Garden Corps is very helpful in maintaining many of our beautiful display gardens. This group of volunteers gathers weekly, during spring and summer, to work on various projects with Display Gardens Manager Megan Fleischer.

Since joining The Arboretum, I have had the opportunity to work with many volunteers, and am so impressed by their work ethic, knowledge of plants, and the environment, and their overall enthusiasm for the work at-hand. It is a great example of the general spirit of volunteerism we are so fortunate to benefit from at The Arboretum and in the community.

Leading Projects
Similarly, it is because of a group of volunteers that the Hopewell Mound Trail Restoration project was launched, and has been such a success. Volunteer Doug Berube, an Ohio Stream Study activity, during the Lakewood School fifth grade field trips.
Certified Volunteer Naturalist, constructed an outline for the project, and was in charge of organizing volunteer work sessions to complete the restoration. He can take great pride in, and ownership for, what he and the other Hopewell Mound Trail Restoration project volunteers were able to accomplish.

Examples such as these are what is envisioned as characteristic for the future of our volunteer program. Volunteers join us with a wealth of knowledge, experience, and passion, and we encourage them to take ownership of projects. In the long-run, this benefits not only The Arboretum — but also the volunteers’ experience.

Improving Resources
As part of enhancing our volunteers’ experience, in 2016 we will create a volunteer handbook, as well as new volunteer training and learning opportunities. These will include advanced training for people who come to us with a specialized skill set — such as Ohio Certified Volunteer Naturalists — to provide unique opportunities for them to learn while they support our mission.

Additional enhancements to the volunteer program, including more regular social opportunities, are in the works as well.

The importance our volunteers play in the success of The Arboretum’s overall operations is undeniable. It is my hope that The Dawes Arboretum is able to benefit this incredible group of people just as much as they have benefited us.

Now is a great time to start volunteering at The Dawes Arboretum! Contact Leslie Bline at labline@dawesarb.org or 800.44.DAWES

Financial Report, Milestone Memberships

- Financial Report -

During Fiscal Year 2015, (October 1, 2014 through September 30, 2015), the community contributed more than $500,000 to The Dawes Arboretum through cash contributions, gifts of goods, and volunteer support. Much of the donated funds were used for tree planting and care, as well as general operations. A large-scale project was begun to repave the Auto Tour (which has not been paved for 25 years), and create new roadways in the north end to improve visitor accessibility. Repaving will be completed in 2016. The Grounds Department, responsible for Arboretum landscaping, display gardens, hardscaping, and mowing — among other tasks, will be provided a new home in a building currently under construction near the Red Barn. This will then allow staff, currently using a garage as office space, to have an adequate work area.

Additional funds covering the $4,155,624 in FY15 expenses were received through earned revenue via rentals, sales, and education programs, in addition to support from The Arboretum endowment fund created by Beman and Bertie Dawes.

The Arboretum spends funds prudently, and in accordance with any designations requested by the donor. In FY15, approximately 76 percent of funds were spent on programs directly related to horticulture, education, historic preservation, and ensuring the grounds are open for public visitation. The remaining 24 percent of expenses were related to administrative oversight and fundraising functions. The Better Business Bureau Wise Giving Alliance produces Standards for Charity Accountability, which recommend an effective charity spend at least 65 percent of its total expenses on program activities. We are proud to exceed this standard.

The Arboretum submits its financial statements annually to an independent accounting firm for audit. A copy of the full audited financial statements can be obtained by calling 800.44.DAWES and asking for the Development Office.

- Milestone Memberships -

The Dawes Arboretum sold its first membership in 1971 for $10. While the membership levels and dues have evolved throughout the years, one thing that has remained constant is the commitment of our members to supporting the love of trees, history, and nature. The Dawes Arboretum is pleased to recognize those members celebrating milestone anniversaries during 2015.
